If you have never taken a formal Credit and Collections course in college, or do not have an understanding of Budgeting and Finance, this book establishes the idea, that it is important to develop your personal forms and documentation that every responsible person must have in order to be considered financially responsible as an adult. Why? Because most institutions are judging you by how you make agreements and how you keep your word through the vehicle of "money." If you don't pay your bills, you aren't keeping "your word, and so that leads to trust issues with folks who are organized and trying to make money by offering goods and services. And so, if you don't grow-up and get that through your previously thick head, you're going to be considered a Loser in life and nobody's going to trust you and let you have a decent life. Robin Leonard's book teaches you how to educate yourself about the baseline issues and then provides you with the supporting methods and basic forms to get on track so you can project that you understand the rules in life and are dependable so you can have a nice place to live, a good job, and the funds you need to empower you and create some quality of life. - Yes, I do recommend this book. :) 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful.
