Rowan Cruft, Matthew H. Kramer, Mark R. Reiff : Crime, Punishment, and Responsibility: The Jurisprudence of Antony Duff before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Crime, Punishment, and Responsibility: The Jurisprudence of Antony Duff:

For many years, Antony Duff has been one of the world's foremost philosophers of criminal law. This volume collects essays by leading criminal law theorists to explore the principal themes in his work. In a response to the essays, Duff clarifies and develops his position on central problems in criminal law theory. Some of the essays concentrate on the topic of criminalization. That is, they examine what forms of conduct (including attempts, offensiveness, and negligence) can aptly qualify as criminal offences, and what principled limits, if any, should be placed on the reach of the criminal law. Several of the other essays assess the thesis that punishment is justifiable as a form of communication between offenders and their community. Those essays examine the presuppositions (about the nature and function of community, and about the moral structure of atonement) that must be embraced if communication is to be a primary role for punishment. The remaining essays examine the nature and limits of responsibility in the law, as they engage with philosophical debates over 'moral luck' by investigating the ways in which the law can legitimately hold people responsible for events that were not within their control. These chapters tie the first and third parts of the book together, as they explore the relationship between the principles that determine a person's responsibility and the principles that determine which types of actions can appropriately be criminalized. Finally, Duff responds with comments that seek to defend and clarify his views while also acknowledging the correctness of some of the critics' objections.

"This well-presented collection of seventeen essays on his work both develops existing arguments and explores fresh avenues for future discussion. It should interest all those with an interest in the theory and doctrine of the criminal law, and in criminal justice more generally." --Findlay Stark, The Edinburgh Law Journal

Rowan Cruft is Senior Lecturer in Philosophy at the University of Stirling. His recent work has appeared in Law Philosophy, The Philosophical Quarterly, Utilitas, and related journals.

Matthew H. Kramer is Professor of Legal Political Philosophy at the University of Cambridge; Fellow of Churchill College, Cambridge; and Director of the Cambridge Forum for Legal Political Philosophy. Among his many books, the most recently published is The Death Penalty Redux: A Philosophical Investigation (OUP, 2011).

Mark R. Reiff is a Senior Lecturer in Legal and Political Philosophy at the University of Manchester School of Law. He is the author of various papers on topics within legal, political, and moral philosophy, and before becoming an academic, spent many years as a practicing lawyer. During the 2008-09 academic year, Dr Reiff was a Visiting Faculty Fellow at the Safra Center for Ethics at Harvard University. His second book, Exploitation and Economic Justice in the Liberal Capitalist State, the product of that fellowship, is forthcoming.
