would be worth my time, and all praised Divided Parents, Shared Children: Legal Aspects of (Residential) Co-Parenting in England, the Netherlands and Belgium (European Family Law):

Worldwide, there has been much discussion on the ways of parenting after parental separation, especially on the desirability for the children involved of equally-shared care (co-parenting) and the feasibility of legal arrangements in which the children alternate their residence between their parents' separate homes (residential co-parenting). Much is unclear about how residential co-parenting affects children and therefore how the legislator and practitioners should deal with this arrangement. Divided Parents - Shared Children seeks to answer three questions to further understand the phenomenon of co-parenting and to provide the legislator, the courts, and parents with possible solutions: What kind of legal framework exists in England and Wales, the Netherlands, and Belgium with regard to (residential) co-parenting, and what can these countries learn from each other's legal systems? Does residential co-parenting occur in the countries discussed, and, if so, how predominant is it? Should these jurisdictions encourage or discourage residential co-parenting through legal action? To answer these questions, the book uses not only legal data from both empirical and literature research, but also sociological, psychological, and demographic studies into residential arrangements and their effect on children.
