Deborah Lockton, Richard Ward : Domestic Violence (Routledge Library Editions: Domestic Abuse) (Volume 2) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Domestic Violence (Routledge Library Editions: Domestic Abuse) (Volume 2):

First published in 1997, this book marks a culmination of a three year research programme focused upon the incidence of domestic violence in Leicester. The study examined the levels of violence, the details of applicants and respondents and the nature of complaints, as well as the policies applied and the problems faced by those enforcing the law. The books sets the findings in the context of the policies on protection of victims of domestic violence, the problems they face and protection after 1997. This book will be of interest to those studying law, social work, sociology and womens studies.

... much value to lawyers, or other agencies, seeking to offer clients an understanding of their predicament and the remedies open to them outside their own specialist field. This book was 30 well spent. -- Family Law, 1998.... this book should be read by anyone involved in the process of dealing with the appalling consequences of this very private crime. -- International Journal of Law and The Family, 1998.About the AuthorDeborah J Lockton, LLB, M Phil, is Deputy Head of the Department of Law, and Richard Ward, LLB, Solicitor, is Professor of Public Law and Head of the Department of Law, both at De Montfort University, Leicester.
